YOU ARE STILL THE EXPERT IN THE CLASSROOM.

Using AI to develop Visual Literacy resources.

Simon Pather-Bosman

Some reflections on using AI.

HOW DO WE MAXIMISE THE UTILITY WHILE UPHOLDING EDUCATIONAL INTEGRITY?

- Should not replace cognitive involvement in work.
- It is a tool – taste and expertise is still needed.
- It can be used to target the skills we want to develop in the classroom.

With that in mind, what about Visual literacy?

- Best when it supplements real advertisements.
- It works nicely to incorporate more copy into images.
- Great for filling gaps.
    - It is very good for targeting specific elements that the other resources haven’t covered.
    - Great for comparative questions because resources can be adapted to be in dialogue.

ITS ALSO FUN!

Resources available.

- Lots of generative tools.
  - ChatGPT
  - Google Gemini
  - Copilot
  - Canva

- Also, for editing.
  - Canva

I find something I like.

- Skills I still want to cover, like:
  - Use of colour.
  - Layout.
  - Font.
  - Language questions.

- Themes that might make for interesting questions:
  - E.G. Negative Marketing

I consider how I want to expand on it.

BUILD YOUR IMAGINATION, BRICK BY BRICK
CHOOSE LEGO® OVER SCREENS!
LEGO
Unlike video games, where you're often following a set path, LEGO bricks let you be the master of your own creations. You can build anything you imagine, from towering castles to futuristic spaceships. The only limit is your creativity!

3.1 Discuss the effectiveness of the use of colour in emphasising the brand. (2)

3.2 With specific reference to the type of font, identify the target audience for this advertisement. (2)

3.3 Explain how specific diction and the stereotypes about screens presented in text are used to position the audience toward video games. (3)

4.1 Refer to the definition below.

Negative marketing, often known as comparison advertising, is a marketing approach in which a company contrasts its product or service to that of a rival, either directly or indirectly to make theirs look better at the expense of their opponent.

With reference to specific visual details and verbal text from both TEXT 3 and TEXT 4, judge which one is more effective at using negative marketing to promote their product. (5)

LET'S GO THROUGH SOME STEPS

Building a new brand: makeup for macho men

Plan: target specific skills and ideas

- Stereotypes
- Positioning
- Parody
- Target market
- Composition and framing
- Font
- Possibility for comparative and effectiveness questions

PROMPT #1

I am thinking of developing makeup for men and want to put together a marketing proposal. Could you help me come up with a good slogan and name for the product

RESULT. From a few options, I chose:

Brand Name: PrimeLayer

Slogan: Defined, not disguised.

Prompt #2

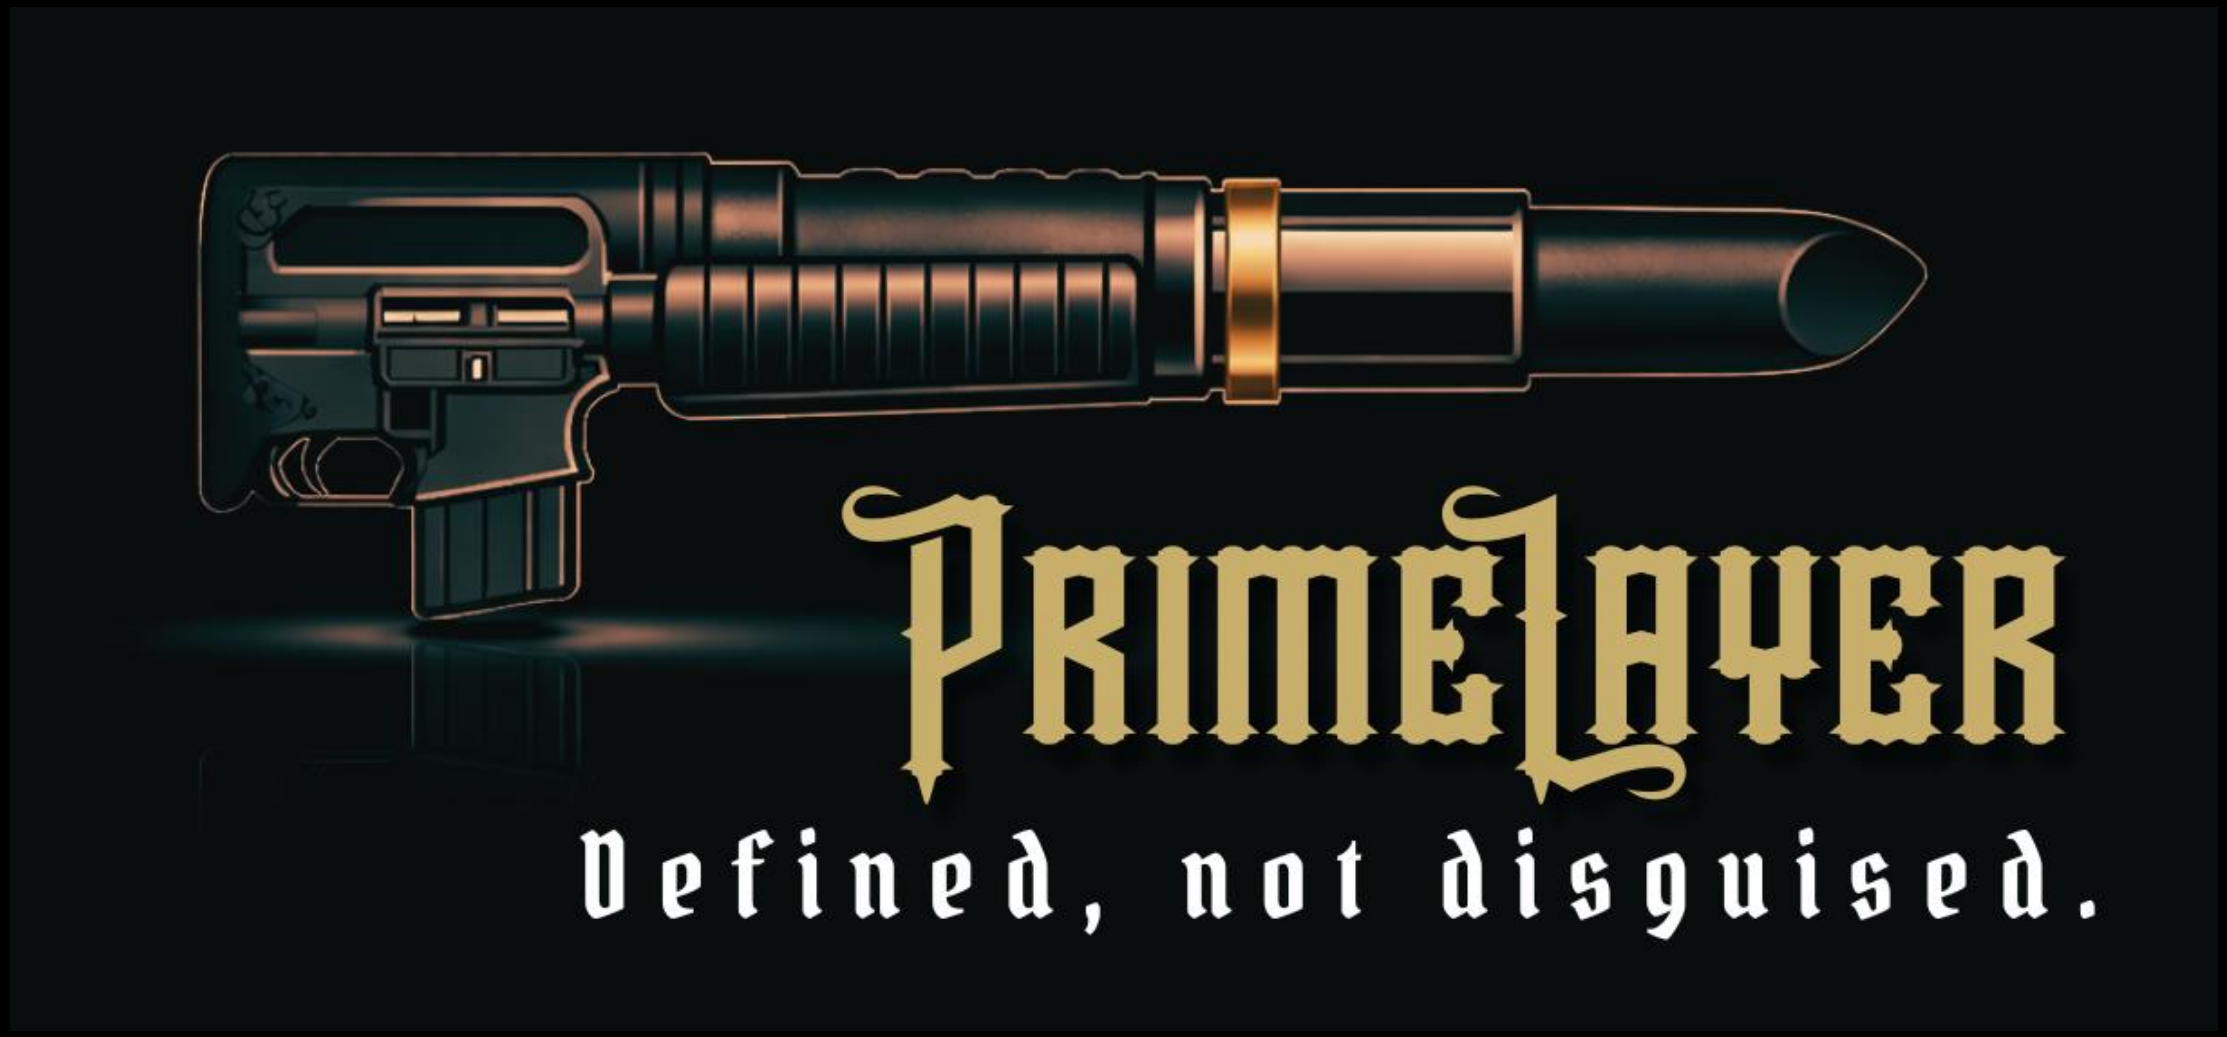

Could you convert this image into a logo so the barrel looks like it is the end of lipstick. Make it look like a luxury brand.

RESULT.

My new brand ☺

PROMPT #3

I like the name 'PrimeLayer' and I like the slogan 'Defined, not disguised.' I would like some copy that goes with that branding that would appeal to a rugged man who is self-conscious but also might be scared to try out makeup.

RESULT.

PrimeLayer isn’t here to cover you up. It’s here to back you up.

This isn’t “makeup” the way you think of it. It’s a tool – like your boots, your gear, your routine. Built for men who want to feel sharper without looking artificial.

PrimeLayer smooths the rough patches, tones down the stress, and brings out the strength in your features. No shine. No fuss. No one notices the product—only the difference.

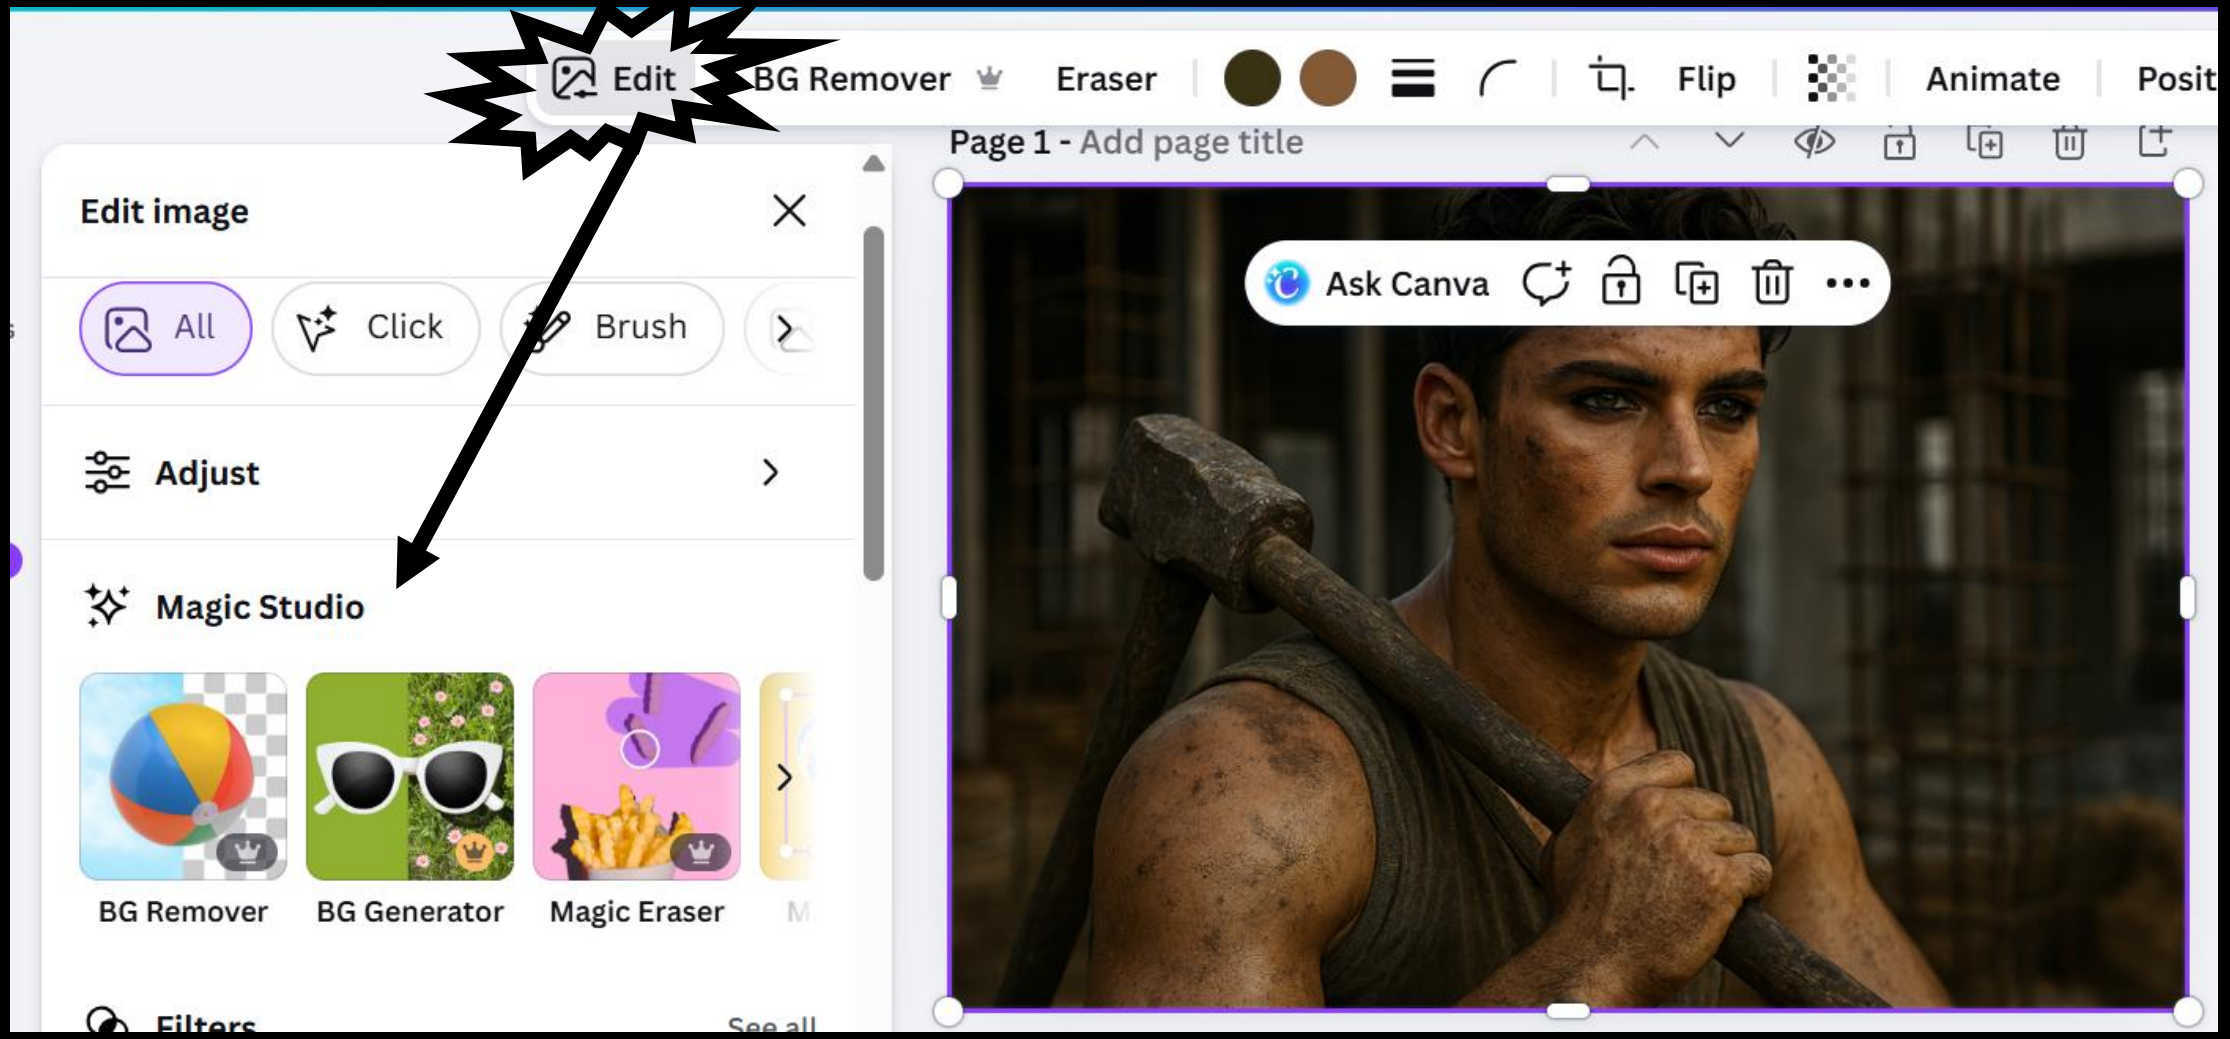

Prompt #4

Could you help me come up with a good marketing image that shows a man hard at work in a rugged setting, but also looking pretty.

Result.
